

Plain facts

My Home, My Life

Housing and support for people with learning difficulties

Most people with learning difficulties can't choose where they live.

Ken Simons found out how people can make choices about where to live.

there are lots of ways of helping people to live in their own home even people who need a lot of help can live in their own home a few people with learning difficulties have even been able to buy their own homes some services and people with learning difficulties are working hard to make housing and support better not many people have had the chance to try out these ideas