

Plain facts

Fair shares for all?

Different kinds of services and support for people with learning difficulties

People with learning difficulties often get different types of services and support depending on where they live or who they live with.

People who live with their families often get different services from people who live in group homes or people who have left hospital.

Older people with learning difficulties do not get many chances to go out or to do things for themselves. Some staff think older people can't learn new things.

It is important for people with learning difficulties to get the services and support they need to do things they want.